It would have pitied any one s heart, to have heard how this poor man was reviled and upbraided by lewd people, even as he passed close by the King s presence; who neither pitied the man, rebuked the unruly people, or gave order for cure of his wounds: but God cured the soldier instantly, for he died ere he was forty paces from the King s presence; and notwithstanding the misery of the man, and sharpness of his wounds, yet was the greatness of his spirit and courage so undaunted, that he rode very dition, or presence of the King. It wa$ observed, that a lewd woman, as he pa#e4 by, calling him Rebel, he only looked sternly at. her, and said, You whore/ Some Nobles seeing the hard-heartednef$ of the King upon this fad accident, and. how little he valued those who either fought for or against him, ypon this mee occasion deserted him, and came for London, c. - Even the looks and gestures of Princes are observed, you may see, and several either good or ill constructions grounded thereon. He was observed in lus die jta feed heartily, and would drink wines at meals freely, but not in excess.: He wa$ rather violent than moderate in exercises: when he walked on foot, he rather trotted than paced, he went so fast. JJ was nothing at all given to luxury, wa? extream sober...
