One night, one clear, lovely night, when all things were sleeping in the moonlight, the Wind came and whispered to the leaves. So softly he came, and so softly he spoke, that they did not wake at first, and he had to kiss them all before he could rouse them from their sleep. Hush, darlings! he said. You must not wake the old Tree, for I have a secret to tell you which he must not hear. Something very wonderful is going to happen, and I have come to tell you about it. What is it, dear Wind? oh, what is it? whispered the little leaves. And they clustered together and listened. Well, my darlings, said the Wind, a very great personage is going to pass through this part of the country to-morrow night. No less a personage than the celebrated Frost, the court...
